The Flavor of Belonging in Culturally Diverse Families

Jade is a girl who lives in two worlds and, coming from a multicultural family, she's on a quest to understand her identity and where she truly belongs.

She is trying to find her place in the world but feels different from the other kids at school. Back home, Jade's parents have their unique approach to love and care. Sometimes Jade is embarrassed by Mama's accent and she can't understand why she is not just like any other mother she knows.

The real adventure unfolds when Jade starts rebelling against her mother's traditional ways of showing love, especially through food. It's a struggle that takes her on a path of discovery, as she learns about her family's rich heritage and her mother's challenging past in Vietnam and as an immigrant.

Jade then discovers that even though Mama doesn't hug or say I love you, the healing aroma of ginger, green onions, and chicken broth does.

"Mama's Love Language" is a heartwarming children's book that addresses the universal theme of belonging and the beauty of cultural diversity. Through Jade's story, children will learn that being different is not only okay but something to be celebrated, and that love can come in many shapes and forms.

This book is ideal for children the ages of 4-9

Reviews

"A fulfilling journey of self acceptance."

-Kirkus Reviews

"The jewel of this book is that love can be communicated in many ways and helps the child bridge two world views. An invaluable resource for parenting."

-Lucinda Katz, K-8 educator and retired head of school for Marin Country Day School and University of Chicago Lab School.

"A tool for teaching inclusivity...Jade's age [is] a time when children are forming their sense of self."

-Amazon Parent Review

"A valuable lesson for young readers that love doesn't have to be materialistic and lives in everyday moments"

- Brandon Jew, Michelin Starred Chef, Mr Jiu's

"It reminds me that with different cultural influences, there is never just one way of expressing love towards another."

- Selina Shek, Board Chair of Chinatown Community Children's Center

"I cried. Written so deeply from the heart with tremendous empathy for both the child's and mother's experiences."

-Amazon Educator and Parent Review

Elisa Stad

Elisa Stad, for the majority of her career, was a brand and international business executive for luxury goods and consumer product companies. After experiencing working in over 40 countries, she acquired a passion for globalization and the sharing of cultures based on her experiences. Elisa is also focused on inspiring the youth through her efforts in healthcare inequities through Stad Center of Pain, Palliative, and Integrative Medicine and serves on college boards at USC, UCSF and Harvard.

Elisa grew up in a mixed-race household, as a daughter of a Vietnamese refugee mother and American father. She grew up in a multicultural home, searching for identity. She also moved homes often in her childhood including to Asia and within the US to Idaho and California.

She always wanted to share with other young children the diversity of feelings and how we can celebrate our unique gifts. You can find her enjoying ballet, visiting local Asian street markets, practicing yoga, and focusing on her spiritual practice. Elisa lives in Southern California with her husband, 3 children and a bernedoodle.
